

I was thinking about what you said this morning about how many of us have changed or grown since being a part of the Huddle. It's so true. Many of us can now see in a more clear way where the church is failing and why we have lost the culture war. For the most part, the church is running programs but not really equipping people to do the ministry. I am currently thinking about what our approach should be here in my neighborhood. I'm not so concerned about a program. More about discipleship around the work and having an action plan.
