Dr. Carrie Madej has been an internal medicine physician since 2001. She has served as a medical director, as a private clinician, and as an associate professor of medical students in Georgia.

Her teaching and practice incorporates the importance of body, mind, and spirit in achieving wellness, and that the balanced body has the inherent ability to heal itself. She believes a physician should be a teacher of health to the patient, as well as identify the causes of disease. It is her mission for us to remember the sacredness of life, our inherent ability to heal, and our connection to God, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit.

Dr. Madej's experiences over the years have educated her on the plan for transhumanism, genetic modification, nanotechnology, and artificial intelligence for humanity. She believes this technology is a threat to our civilization, and she now spends her time educating others on these issues and sounds the alarm about "Human 2.0".
