

On the grassy median of Park Avenue, overlooked by the homes of some of the richest people in the world, a bronze plaque is entombed in concrete to insure that we never forget one of the heroes of America's revolutionary war.

It's not a general, or even a foot soldier, but instead the plaque honors a prostitute who somehow delayed British officers long enough to allow George Washington and his troops to escape from New York.

I'm sorry I forgot her name, and I'll assume her tactics were honorable, but what's more important to this discussion is the motive for her actions, of putting herself in harm's way to assist unknown and anonymous brothers in their common struggle.

The motive, I'm sorry to say, wasn't love, devotion, or even patriotism, but instead it was pure hatred. She risked her life to help those who were killing her hated enemy, whatever their names may be. She wasn't counted among the "three percent" that won the war, but instead she was part of the much bigger percentage that made victory possible.

A revolution cannot succeed without popular support, and although much more than three percent may be looking forward to it, they would still face an uphill battle without much of the population on their side. Our rulers understand this, and this is why they devote so much time, money, and effort to keeping Americans divided.

You have to inspire the shared hatred that will unite all Americans in our common struggle for the Bill of Rights, and you'll best do that by pointing out the crimes and abuses of those in power, and expressing how you hate them for it. They've robbed us, killed us, impoverished us, unjustly imprisoned us, deceived us, stolen our children's minds, if not the children themselves, and they epitomize humanity's evil extreme. They fill a cesspool of war, murder, brutality, corruption, betrayal, greed, treason and perversion. I can easily fill another paragraph with their "long train of abuses", but if you don't hate them already, you may be deserving of some hatred yourself.

There are still a lot of people who aren't getting real news, or any news, but they're not completely blind to what's going on around them either. They remain slightly confused, but are receptive to new information because even the deepest sleepers are starting to see that they've been betrayed. We may already have the popular support we need, but many of them are easily misdirected by propaganda. Express your anger at its proper target, and you'll soon see others aiming at the same target, which of course, makes all of this a lot easier for everyone on our side. Many people are already angry, and only need to see that there are others who share that sentiment. This is no time to be shy. We'll be going to war soon, and we'll need everyone on our side that we can get.

There does come a time when all people are either "part of the solution, or part of the problem", but until then, we should be strengthening local bonds, finding comrades, and recruiting all kinds of help by simply pointing out that we do have one common enemy, controlling both political parties, and they happen to be attacking us. If you're reading this, you already know enough to explain false flags, false opposition, and propaganda techniques to others, and all Americans need to be aware of these things to avoid falling victim to further deceit.

All empirical data we have on the subject suggests that the vast majority of Americans are already on our side, but they remain silent because media messages have convinced them they're all alone in a tiny minority. It's your blatant expression of hatred for the crooks and perverts ruling this country that will change this, by giving our side the visibility it needs. The visibility is needed to inspire confidence in others that we're not just a few in number, but instead, we have the power to shake these crooks off our backs on a whim.

Even if your message is not well-received by some, it will be remembered, and reinforced by someone else at another time and place. You may not be present to witness the growth of hatred in an American, but if you plant the seed, someone else will water it, and a third party may add the right fertilizer for this needed hatred to grow. Once the growth begins, it will expand exponentially, just as we've already seen happen with the dissemination of truth.

Few people will argue in defense of a pedophile, so you'll make good progress by pointing out that this particular plague of perversion is popular among our "elected" officials.

Where people are struggling to eat and pay rent, it's good to remind them of the $21 Trillion that "disappeared" from the Pentagon, where thousands of computers have been caught logging onto kiddie porn sites.

What places them above the laws that dictate your actions everyday? Hopefully you have no desire to view child pornography, but you still know that doing so would result in a long prison sentence, unless of course, you happen to be part of our "government". Why are these people, and the foreign army they've invited in, immune from the prosecution that would have you behind bars for similar actions? The arbitrary enforcement of law defines tyranny.

The government agencies that we pay to insure that our food and medicine are safe and healthy, are allowing us to be poisoned. Those tasked with guarding our environment will gladly see it polluted for a small bribe. And of course, the "news" industry that's supposed to be keeping the public informed on these matters, has been working hand-in-hand with the enemy, to insure that we remain victims of our "government's" endless crimes.

We have a population that's been conditioned to be politically correct, non-confrontational, conformist, and to shun any type of hatred. You have to show them that it's okay to hate again, and you'll have to lead by example.

Hate isn't a crime. It's a natural, human emotion, and sometimes it's a necessary one, because it prevents us from falling victim to those who would hurt or kill us, or who have already done so. Hatred has a legitimate place in our society, and there are many people deserving of it right now.

Is there any reason that you shouldn't hate those who've stolen all you should have, lie to you whenever they speak, and molest any child within reach?

Talk to parents about government pedophilia. Talk to the poor about government theft. Talk to victims of our "justice" system about police brutality, the loss of our common law courts, and their unlawful imprisonment. In short, find the soft spot in everyone where seeds of hatred are most likely to grow, and make sure the seed is firmly planted by expressing your own hatred, without making any threats, of course.

Show people that it's okay to hate again, because those in power have made it necessary, and happen to deserve all the hatred we can muster. Hating them is now a necessity of our survival, so spread it thickly. — Jolly Roger
